

NYCDPR Nathan Weidenbaum Park & Facility

The .7-acre plot was designated parkland in 1936. Because of the construction of the Brooklyn-Queens Expressway, the restoration of the park, then called Little Bush Park did not officially begin until 1971. In 1986 a local law renamed the land Nathan Weidenbaum Park in honor of a long time Woodside resident who served as the President of the WynWoode Gardens Homeowners Association and was active in other community groups.

AG provided MEP design for the reconstruction of Nathan Weidenbaum Park, which commenced in October 2000. The project refurbished the basketball courts, sitting areas, and swings. Steel fencing was erected to replace an older chain-link fence. New play equipment with safety surfacing and a lighting system were installed, as well as World's Fair benches, decorative pavements and greenery, camel spray showers, donkey animal art, game tables, and water fountains.
